have gone through that has made them a better person or transformed them in some way. And we just filmed it and it's one of the best experiences I've ever had because I've never been able to meet someone completely new, sit down with them and really have a meaningful deep conversation where we just dive into them and who they are and what makes them them and what makes them smile every day and I think a lot of the really beautiful stories that they share will help a lot of people. Hopefully it will change something in their lives like they did in their own lives. It was incredible!

On The Move: Can you tell me more about the different episodes in the series?

Baby Ariel: One of them happens to be my ex-boyfriend and we talked about our relationship and then one was my best friend and then like seven of them I didn't know. And then there was my other friend so just a bunch of different kind of people. They've got completely different point of views, they come from completely different worlds and places and talk about completely different things. Like I spoke to one person about hair, I spoke to another person about bullying online and self-confidence and body positivity and being creative. Like totally different worlds, different people's perspectives.

« THE ARIEL MOVEMENT IS A WORLD WHERE WE CAN GO AND BE OURSELVES AND NOT FOCUS ON JUDGMENT AND MEAN PEOPLE. »

On The Move: You just mentioned self-confidence and body positivity. How do you - as a 18-year-old girl living in the public eye - work on this on a daily basis and which advice would you give to your fans about it?

Baby Ariel: First of all, before anything I just want to say that it takes time. Like you don't wake up the next day and you're like 'okay I'm fully in love with myself', no it takes time, it's a journey and I think every person throughout their entire life goes through that journey. And there are days where you go all the way back and there are days where you go all the way back up. Then I would say spend time off social media because it is toxic and that's so cliché, people probably say it all the time but it is toxic. The more time you spend comparing yourself and you're so focused on what other people are doing every day that you need to put it down and focus on you and learn more about yourself. Try a new sport, try a new club, try anything that makes you focus on you. Also surround yourself with people that love you and care for you and lift you up because I think every person deserves happiness no matter what. So if you can create a loving and warm environment for yourself then do it and don't be afraid to cut out negative people because sometimes there are bad people that have been in our lives for a long time but if they're not nice to you then you cut them off (laughs)! And be kinder to yourself because you deserve it.

DUMIEBI

Fashion in the Art

Valentina Bulava speaks to British fashion designer Barbara Biosah about her collection's debut at Saatchi Gallery during London Fashion Week.

DUMIEBI is an exclusive and luxury womenswear brand created in September 2015 by British fashion designer Barbara Biosah. The brand specialises in atypical detailed exotic clothing, shoes and accessories that are handmade at her ateliers in Paris and London with her highly skilled team of interns.

Although it has only been two years since the brand was launched, the designer says it feels like she has been doing it for most of her life as her passion began at a very young age. “I have to say I have been blessed with quite a great background in fashion and it has definitely helped me get to where I am today,” Barbara shared with me.

Her first year was spent studying Fashion design at Parsons, the new school for design in New York City, and then the International Fashion Academy in Paris. During her studies and after graduation, she gained experience in a lot of different internships. Barbara was lucky enough to work for three months with Gareth Pugh, a designer she truly admires. His examples inspired her and gave her the confidence to start her own brand at the age of just 23.

Having an international background of studying and working in different cities gave the designer the opportunity to work with many different cultures and types of characters that she considered very important for any fashion designer. From childhood, Barbara was surrounded by fashion. Her mum owned a boutique in north London and had tailors working for her. That is where as a young girl, she found an interest in sewing.

Born and raised in London but of Nigerian heritage, Barbara visited a lot of Nigerian family parties, where she fell in love with the culture, flamboyant and bright coloured attire. It reminded her of couture fashion designers such as Christian Lacroix. It was her greatest inspiration for becoming a couture designer herself.

Barbara's first successful design was the dress she made during a project for her A-levels fashion and clothing course for her 18th Birthday. It was a light-pink hand-painted floral A-symmetrical dress with a purple organza ruffle design on one side.

“Fashion is limitless, it is an expression. When I create something, it represents my interpretation and I feel it is something

I can be free with. I usually like to create beautiful well-crafted pieces of art that can be worn by modern young women,” said Barbara.

It is important to her that her collections really represent who she is as a designer. Another meaningful thing is creating something that she loves and to work with amazing talented people who are passionate about what they do.

Barbara would say that London's fashion is quite free, so everyone can be avant-garde, edgy and generally different. It is very bold where people like to make a statement, stand out and express themselves.

I fell in love with Barbara's designs when I first met her during the Fashion and Politics Day at the Houses of Parliament. I noticed her beautiful nude and yellow coloured dresses, embroidered with amazing Swarovski crystals right away. Later, I found out it was inspired by a Baroque painting ‘The Fall of the Damned’ by Sir Peter Paul Ruben.

It is amazing how Barbara turns her inspiration into designs. She likes to implement different cultures (mainly African) and renaissance art so it is a
